

CONTROL ROOM

Different channels. Different truths.

by Jehane Noujaim

One of the first words spoken in Jehane Noujaim's captivating documentary is "propaganda." This is fitting, since the question of who is controlling the truth goes to the very heart of her film, which follows events at Al Jazeera, the largest Arab news network, during the war in Iraq. At once a clear-eyed document of the war, an inquiry into the way events are filtered into "news," and a complex, surprising portrait of the personalities behind the scenes, "Control Room" is a must-see movie.

Control Room, a documentary about the Middle East news agency Al-Jazeera, takes a perspective that most Americans won't share, but refusing to look at perspectives different from one's own is a denial of larger realities.
