MICHAEL MOORE
SLACKER
UPRISING

They slept till noon... but still had time to vote

Slacker Uprising traces Michael Moore's 62-city tour of the swing states during the 2004 Presidential election and records the thrilling -- and frightening -- response he received across the country.

Moore's goal four years ago (when "Slacker Uprising" was filmed), was to convince millions of non-voting "slackers" -- mostly between the ages of 18-29 -- to give voting a try. Starting out in Elk Rapids, Michigan, in front of an audience of 400, the tour caught on like wildfire with up to 16,000 slackers each night coming to see Moore and his traveling band of speakers, comedians, and musicians.

Part concert tour, part stand-up comedy performance and part rock concert, Slacker Uprising is an uplifting and patriotic look at the birth of a new political generation in America -- a generation of young people who would signal the eventual era of "Obamania" that would take place just four years later.
